

Tidings of Joy: Our Holiday Magic Makers

Building Community, One Tree at a Time: Why Washington Trust Bank Partners with Hutton for the Holidays

As the largest privately owned bank in the Northwest, Washington Trust Bank is proud to serve the people who live and work in the communities they call home. Deeply rooted in Spokane, they recognize the importance of giving back—especially during the holiday season, when the needs of individuals and families can become even more pressing. Their partnership with Hutton Settlement holds special meaning for their entire team.

For over a century, the Hutton Settlement has been a vital part of the Spokane community, offering long-term, stable housing for children in need. Their mission to provide a safe, healthy, and supportive living environment for vulnerable youth, which aligns perfectly with Washington Trust Bank's values of compassion, service, and community stewardship.

Shared by the team at WTB ... "Each year, we look forward to joining Hutton in spreading holiday cheer through their Christmas Tree Sale and Holiday Market. This cherished event does more than light up homes with beautiful trees—it lights up lives. The fundraiser strengthens our community in two powerful ways: by offering families an affordable and meaningful way to celebrate the season, and by raising crucial funds that support Hutton's year-round mission of care"

Whether it's helping families find the perfect tree or lending a hand at the market, their team has been an honored part of this tradition. It's their way of investing in something that lasts far beyond the holiday season—a brighter future for the children of our community. Washington Trust Bank, believes that when we work together, we grow together. And there's no better example of that spirit than the continued partnership with the Hutton Settlement.

ATC Manufacturing: Bringing Heart to Hutton at the Holidays

At Advanced Thermoplastic Composites, ATC, in Post Falls, Idaho, precision and innovation are at the core of their aerospace work—but during the holidays, it's heart that takes the lead.

ATC continues to join hands with Hutton Settlement to help make the season brighter for our youth and house parents. For the ATC team, the partnership is personal. "I have a child with special needs, and I've experienced firsthand how powerful a supportive community can be," shared one team member. "Being able to extend that same kind of love to the kids at Hutton is incredibly meaningful."

ATC is proud to provide high-skill jobs in North Idaho, but they're equally proud of the culture they've built—a team that feels more like a family. Supporting Hutton is one more way they show up for others. "We want the kids to feel seen, valued, and cared for. Even small acts of kindness can make lasting memories."

The team wanted to share one of their favorite family memories of seeing their children's faces light up opening stockings filled with thoughtful surprises—a joy they now hope to pass on to the children at Hutton.

"Giving doesn't have to be big to matter. When we each give a little, it adds up to something beautiful." From aerospace to advocacy, ATC Manufacturing proves that lifting others is just as important as lifting aircraft.
